GOVERNOR'S NAME FORGED AT BAR'S "CLUB" REGISTER

Signature of Joseph W. Folk Scratched Across "Membership List" of Wide-Open Bar—County Wide Open for Most Part—Twelve Bartenders Busy Across County Line Near West End Heights—Drinks Sold at Several Gardeons.

With the name of Joseph W. Folk scrawled across the page of what purported to be a membership register of an alleged club known as the Belmont, which established a bar just across the county line from West End Heights, the most active bartender in participation in St. Louis County was transacted yesterday.

Scratches on the part of the "register," amidst signatures clearly legible, as many were profane and obscene, appeared the name of Missouri's Governor, evidently placed there to denote by some presumed member of the organization, to which admission could be secured by purchasing several worth of drinks, resembleable to drinks at the bar.

Two bartenders, stripped to their undershirts, off a rushing business for a passing throng, men and women alike, drank freely, and no evidence of concealment was attempted, the bar being held just across the line within the county.

According to the information issued to those of a thirsty temperament, the Belmont Club charges but 25 cents for initiation. Members are then entitled to all the liquor they desire, so long as their money lasts.

William White, at Green Creek Lake did a rushing business. White has built a saloon in the lake, and his place was an objective point for the numerous small craft on that lake of water throughout the day, and a mecca for the thirsty.

The saloons on the Green Creek bank closed part of the time and open the rest of the day.

Delmar Garden was closed.

It was also reported that drinks were sold at Mark Gumpert's Delmar bar.

Robert Smith, the keeper who was selected last week in the Clayton Circuit Court for violation of the Sunday closing law, was not liberally patronized. The New Inn, across the street from Gumpert's, was closed for the first time.

Robert Smith's place was still open last night. Smith is the keeper who was convicted last week in the Clayton Circuit Court for violation of the Sunday closing law.

Beer was obtainable at Morrisville and a few other places in the vicinity of the city limits, but the open saloon in the county yesterday was the exception rather than the rule.

They went to the saloon and deduced they found a man at the bar with an empty glass of beer, but Gumpert refused to sell it to them, and they left the place.

A few minutes later they returned and the bar with a new bottle of beer in hand, and they took the bottle off evidence and placed Gumpert under arrest.
